Do you know of a dwelling for people that has a very large (huge) enclosed (fenced) area surrounding it? I do! Its the AUSSLC. If you know of another, please let me know! My family members have been looking for such a place, (other than the AUSSLC.)

Do you have a child (adult or other) that can only say and understand very, very few words? one that can't hold any kind of conversation? Can't understand any T.V. when people are speaking? Can't read anything? Try, try to imagine yourself with that affliction.

My adult son is mostly healthy and strong physically. He enjoys being active, his kind of workshop, cleaning up his plate, tables and chair after eating and smoking a cigar. But he can not understand most words. His restlessness impels him to spend most of his days walking all around/over the very large protected campus at AUSSLC. If he were placed out in a community with out such boundaries, he most likely would wonder off, get lost and eventually get killed or maybe because of his confusion, even kill someone (hes very strong.) If he is placed into a community without a very large enclosed protected area, this could very well happen. If he is required to be placed in such a dwelling without my permission, who is going to be responsible for deaths of this sort?!

Very concerned,
